tri-al (trī-ăl), n. [< A.F. trial, triel, trial < trier, to try: see try], 1, the act of testing or putting to proof; examination; 2, the state of being tested or put to proof; 3, an attempt or endeavor; an experiment; 4, hardship; suffering or temptation; that which puts to the test faith, mercy, patience, etc.: Law, a judicial examination; as, a trial in court: trial by battle, Law, the settlement of a dispute by personal combat; a legal form of trial in England until 1819: trial and error, Math., a method of finding the value of an unknown quantity, as in an equation, by assuming a value for it, noting the error which results therefrom, and correcting the assumed value accordingly; Psych., a method of learning which shows little evidence of reasoning.

Syn. test, experiment, proof. These words have in common the idea of trying to establish or verify something that is uncertain. Trial is rather generally applied to the host of things that in ordinary existence require trying. We make a trial of our skill to find out what degree of it we possess; we buy a radio set on trial to see how we like it. Test is narrower in its application than trial: a test is a trial that proves, and hence is decisive; we put a new appliance through a strict test; one who has proved himself loyal has stood a test. Proof is like test in that it is final; it is a definite discovery, frequently in the intellectual field, but often in the realm of practical affairs. That which is put on trial, to test, or to proof, has something depending on the outcome. In this respect experiment differs from these words, for no more may depend on a successful experiment than the confirmation of an opinion. The failure of an experiment may mean nothing. On the other hand, when experiment proves or demonstrates, it becomes test and proof of the greatest value.

tri-al bal-ance in double-entry bookkeeping, the statement of footings which tests whether the two sides of the ledger balance.

tri-al ju-ry a jury for trying a case in court; a petit jury: distinguished from grand jury.

A mishap is a bit of ill luck. A misfortune is a mishap on a large scale. A mishap may be a matter of momentary regret or slight inconvenience; a misfortune is the beginning of a train of consequent ills. Disaster and calamity are terrible misfortunes, with ruin, destruction, and loss following in their wake. A calamity is sudden, crushing, and inevitable; a devastating earthquake is a calamity. A disaster is sudden and ruinous; it often occurs through a culpable neglect, a guilty omission, or lack of proper foresight. A great and destructive fire is a disaster, as is a railroad wreck, or a personal failure involving one's family in financial ruin or scandal. A catastrophe is an event so calamitous and disastrous as to be final or fatal. In a personal sense, a catastrophe would be so grave a misfortune that one's life or some aspect of it would cease. In dramatic literature, the dénouement of a play is called the catastrophe.—Ant., n. comfort, happiness, gratification, pleasure, triumph.

tru-ism (trōō'ĭzm), n. [see true], an old and accepted truth; also, a hackneyed truth.

Syn. axiom, adage, saw, saying, precept, maxim, motto, proverb, aphorism, byword, dictum. These words agree in naming the expression of a truth in terse, meaty form. The axiom is a truth so evident that any reasoning brought forth to prove it is superfluous. A common axiom in mathematics is, "Things equal to the same thing are equal to each other." A precept is a rule concerning conduct, especially moral conduct, often expressed as a command, and frequently on a lofty plane; as, "My children, love one another." A maxim is like a precept, but is more often directed toward the practical side of life; as, "Tell the truth and shame the devil." A motto condenses a slogan or truth into a few words, sometimes inspirational in character. Adage and proverb name pithy expressions in which practical truths have been garnered; both the adage and the proverb are widely known, but the adage gives the more ancient wisdom, the proverb the homelier: "It's a long lane that has no turning" is an adage; "The early bird gets the worm" is a proverb. A saying is habitual, current, sensible; as, "There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." A saw is an old, worn out, tiresome saying. A truism is self-evident, often vapid and flavorless.

Syn. conquer, defeat, subjugate, subdue, rout, overcome, surmount, overpower, discomfit, crush, humble, beat, reduce. To overcome is to prevail over, to get the better of, as obstacles or enemies. To defeat is to overthrow decisively, though perhaps only temporarily; a defeated army may rally in another action. To rout troops is not only to defeat them, but to force them into disorderly, disgraceful retreat. To conquer is to secure more than a temporary advantage; it is to achieve a victory that is considered final, and it is accompanied by the idea of gain; a conquering army defeats its enemies and occupies their territory. To vanquish is to defeat decisively, often in a single action or combat; it has the finality of conquer, for which it is now chiefly a rhetorical synonym. Both conquer and vanquish may be applied figuratively to moral objects, always with the idea of struggle; as, to conquer a vicious temper; to vanquish unworthy fears. To subjugate is to bring under a yoke, or into bondage; literally, subjugate refers to a people conquered and kept in hand by military control. Figuratively, we subjugate our passions or animal natures. To subdue is not only to conquer but to tame; a subjugated people is disciplined, but, though helpless, resistant in attitude. A subdued people is a cowed people. We surmount difficulties, obstacles, and hindrances by rising above them through force of will.

Vol-sun-ga Sa-ga (vŏl′sŏŏng-gä sä′gä), [O.N. royal family], Norse Myth., the Old Norse version of the famous medieval legend of Sigurd the Volsung and the Nibelungs, used largely by Wagner as the basis of his operas on this theme: told also, with considerable variation, in the medieval German epic, Nibelungenlied.

[1]volt (vōlt), n. [< Fr. volte < It. volta < Lat. volvere (volutus), to turn], 1, in fencing, a leap to one side; 2, the gait of a horse stepping sideways round a center.

[2]volt (vōlt), n. [< name of A. Volta (1745–1827), It. physicist, inventor of voltaic battery], Elec., the practical unit of electromotive force; an electromotive force, or difference of electrical potential, which will cause a current of one ampere to flow through a conductor against a resistance of one ohm.

volt-age (vōl′tăj), n. Elec., electromotive force, or difference in potential, in terms of volts.

vol-ta-ic (vŏl-tā′ĭk), adj. Elec., 1, of or pertaining to the process of producing electricity by chemical action; galvanic; 2, of or pertaining to Volta, the physicist: voltaic arc, Elec., a short band of light, sometimes curved or arc-shaped, formed when a powerful electric current passes across a space between two points, generally of carbon, in a broken circuit, as in an arc light: voltaic battery, Elec., a combination of several voltaic cells, or, less correctly, a single cell: voltaic cell, Elec., a device for producing electrical energy by chemical action, consisting of two electrodes of different materials in contact with one or more electrolytes (see cell, illus.).

vol-ta-ism (vōl′tă-izm), n. Elec., 1, the act or process of producing electrical energy by the chemical action of a liquid on one of two plates of dissimilar metal connected by a conductor; 2, electricity, or the electric current, so produced; 3, the branch of electrical science that treats of producing electrical energy in this manner.

vol-tam-e-ter (vŏl-tăm′ē-tĕr), n. [volta(ic) + meter], Phys., an instrument for measuring the strength of an electric current by its effect in decomposing substances through which it passes, as in electrolysis.—adj. vol″ta-met′ric.

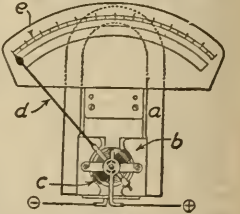
volte–face (vōlt″-fās′), n. [Fr. = turn face], a turning around; a change of front, in argument, politics, or the like.

vol-tite (vŏl′tīt), n. [see [2]volt], a commercial preparation for insulating electric wires.

volt-me-ter (vōlt′mē″tĕr), n. [volt + meter], Elec., an instrument for measuring an electromotive force, or difference in potential, in volts.



VOLTMETER

a, permanent magnet; b, pole piece; c, armature coil; d, pointer; e, scale.

vol-u-bil-i-ty (vŏl″ū-bĭl′ĭ-tĭ), n. [see voluble], 1, too great fluency in speech; talkativeness; 2, the quality of being easily set in motion; aptness to roll or revolve.

vol-u-ble (vŏl′ū-bl), adj. [< Lat. volubilis < volvere, to turn round], 1, smooth or fluent in speech; talkative; glib; 2, rotating easily and smoothly; apt to roll: Bot., Rare, twining: used of vines.—adv. vol′u-bly.—n. vol′u-ble-ness.

Syn. loquacious, fluent, glib. (See garrulous.)

vol-ume (vŏl′ūm), n. [< Lat. volumen, a roll, fold < volvere, to turn round: in allusion to the fact that ancient books were rolled], 1, a number of printed sheets, bound together and forming a written or printed work of the nature of a book, or comprising several such works; 2, one of a numbered series of parts or books making up a complete work or set of related works; as, the second volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica; 3, something of a rounded form; a coil; 4, space occupied, as measured by cubic units; hence, a large quantity; as, a volume of smoke: Math., the cubical measure, or the amount of space, in any magnitude of three dimensions; the amount of space inclosed by the surfaces of a solid; Mus., quantity or fulness of tone and sound.

Syn. bulk, mass, quantity, size, amount.

vol-u-me-nom-e-ter (vŏl′ū-mē-nŏm′ē-tẽr), n. [< Lat. volumen, volume + Gk. metron, a measure], Phys., an instrument for measuring the volume of a solid by the quantity of liquid or gas which it displaces.

vo-lu-me-ter (vŏ-lū′mē-tẽr), n. [volume + ²meter], Phys., an instrument for measuring volumes, especially of liquids or gases.

vol-u-met-ric (vŏl′ū-mĕt′rĭk), adj. Phys., of or pertaining to measurement by volume; distinguished from gravimetric: volumetric analysis, Chem., analysis to determine the proportion of chemical substances present in a solution, by titration, or the addition of such a volume of a reagent in the form of a solution of known strength as will produce a definite and recognizable reaction.—adj. vol′u-met′ri-cal.—adv. vol′u-met′ri-cal-ly.

vo-lu-mi-nous (vŏ-lū′mĭ-nŭs), adj. [< L.L. voluminosus, full of rolls or folds < Lat. volvere, to roll], 1, of or pertaining to volume or volumes; 2, having many folds or coils; great in bulk; swelling; 3, compiled in many volumes; 4, having written a number of books.—n. vo-lu′mi-nous-ness.—adv. vo-lu′mi-nous-ly.

Vö-lund (vö′lōond), n. [< O.N. Völundr, related to Eng. Wayland], Norse Myth., a ruler of the elves and a remarkable smith, who was imprisoned on an island but who escaped by flying: identified with Wayland of old English lore.

vol-un-ta-ry (vŏl′ŭn-tā-rĭ), adj. [< Lat. voluntarius, voluntary < voluntas, free will < volens (-entis), willing < velle, to be willing], 1, coming from the will; 2, not constrained; free; spontaneous; 3, intentional; not accidental; deliberate; as, voluntary manslaughter; 4, regulated or controlled by the will; as, the voluntary muscles; 5, able to act by one's own will; free; as, a voluntary agent: Law, 1, acting without compulsion; 2, acting without valuable consideration; Eccl., of or pertaining to voluntaryism, or the principle of supporting the church by spontaneous contributions and efforts instead of by state aid and patronage:—n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], 1, one who supports the principles of voluntaryism; 2, any spontaneous or free act or piece of work: Mus., a piece of music, often an organ solo, played before, during, or after, a church service.—adv. vol′un-ta-ri-ly.—n. vol′un-ta-ri-ness.

Syn., adj. spontaneous, unconstrained, volitional, intentional, deliberate, gratuitous, unsolicited.—Ant., adj. involuntary, automatic, unintentional.

vol-un-ta-ry-ism (vŏl′ŭn-tā-rĭ-ĭzm), n. the system of supporting a school or church by voluntary effort, rather than by state aid and patronage.—n. vol′un-ta-ry-ist.

vol-un-teer (vŏl′ŭn-tēr′), n. one who enters into any service voluntarily; especially, one who enters military or naval service of his own free will: opposite of conscript: Law, 1, one who enters a transaction voluntarily; 2, one to whom a conveyance is made without valuable consideration: Volunteers of America, an organization for religious and philanthropic work, somewhat resembling the Salvation Army:—adj. of or pertaining to volunteers; voluntary: volunteer plant, Bot., a plant that has come up from naturally fallen seed:—v.i. to offer or bestow without constraint or compulsion; as, to volunteer one's services:—v.t. to offer one's services freely; enter into any service without being urged or compelled.

vo-lup-tu-a-ry (vŏ-lŭp′tū-ā-rĭ), n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], [see voluptuous], one who is devoted to the pleasures that appeal to the senses; a sensualist:—adj. pertaining to, or promoting, the gratification of sensual appetites.

vo-lup-tu-ous (vŏ-lŭp′tū-ŭs), adj. [< Lat. voluptuosus, full of pleasure < voluptas, pleasure], 1, producing, ministering to, or arising from, the pleasures of the senses; sensuous; 2, devoted to luxurious pleasures or the gratification of the senses; sensual; as, a voluptuous existence.—adv. vo-lup′tu-ous-ly.—n. vo-lup′tu-ous-ness.

A VOLUTE

vo-lute (vŏ-lūt′), n. [Fr. < Lat. voluta, rolled < volvere (volutus), to roll], Arch., a spiral, scroll-shaped, architectural ornament such as appears in the Ionic capital (see ²capital, illus.): Zoöl., 1, any of several varieties of mollusk with a whorled shell, found chiefly in tropical waters, some being very beautiful and highly prized; 2, a whorl, or single turn, as of a spiral shell:—adj. rolled up, or having a spiral scroll: volute spring, a strip of flat metal or wire coiled into the shape of a cone (see spring, illus.).—adj. vo-lut′ed.

vol-vu-lus (vŏl′vū-lŭs), n. [pl. -li (-lī)], [L.L. < Lat. volvere, to roll], Med., a form of intestinal obstruction, caused by a twisting or displacement of the intestines.

vo-mer (vō′mẽr), n. [Lat. = a plowshare], Anat., a thin, flat bone, forming part of the plate-like central wall of the nose.—adj. vo′mer-ine (-ĭn).

vom-it (vŏm′ĭt), n. [< Lat. vomitus, vomited matter < vomere (-itus), to vomit], 1, matter thrown up by the stomach; 2, an emetic: black vomit, Med., a copious vomiting of a dark fluid: a usually fatal symptom in yellow fever; also, the fever itself:—v.i. 1, to throw up the contents of the stomach; 2, to come forth, or be sent out, with violence:—v.t. 1, to throw up from the stomach; spew; 2, to discharge with violence; belch forth.—adj. vom′i-tive.

vom-i-to (vŏm′ĭ-tō; vō′mē-tō), n. [< Sp. vómito, vomiting < Lat. vomitus: see vomit], yellow fever, especially in its most virulent form.

vom-i-to-ry (vŏm′ĭ-tō-rĭ), adj. [see vomit], emetic; inducing vomiting:—n. [pl. -ries (-rĭz)], 1, a medicine that induces vomiting; an emetic; 2, in an ancient Roman amphitheater, one of the main entrances to the seats.

Syn. cunning, crafty, artful, sly, subtle, deceptive, designing, tricky, hypocritical. The cunning man is shrewd enough to divine how to compass his ends, and clever enough to conceal the means which he has employed. His wit is directed toward covering up, outwitting, and escaping entrapment; such wit is not of a high order, being possessed by some animals, notably the foxes, a fact which has produced a synonym for cunning—"foxy." A child may be naturally cunning, but it requires an experienced person to be crafty. A crafty man may descend to graver deception than the cunning one; he is also more alert, and possessed of greater ability; as, a crafty old schemer; a crafty politician. Artful persons are likely to be tricky and indirect; their purposes are ingeniously concealed under their careful words and actions. An artful child may deceive the most observant of adults. Sly connotes a smooth cunning; the sly man is more vulgar and less able, however, than the cunning man; he is, too, more wary and silent; a sly trick is mean as well as underhand. Subtle implies unusual mental ability; the subtle man has in mind more than the immediate object; his aim is worth while, and he attains it with skill; as, a subtle statesman. The wily person ensnares and deceives others by stratagems and tricks; as, a wily detective.

zoom (zōōm), n. [imit.], Aëro., the maneuver executed when a pilot turns his airplane suddenly upward, utilizing its speed in climbing for a time at a steeper angle than can be steadily maintained:—v.i. Aëro., to execute such a maneuver.

zo-öm-e-try (zō-ŏm′ē-trĭ), n. [< Gk. zō(i)on, animal + metron, a measure], the study of the relative size of the different parts of animals.

zo-ö-mor-phism (zō″ō-môr′fĭzm), n. [< Gk. zō(i)on, animal + morphē, form], 1, the attribution of animal form or nature to a god or superhuman being; 2, the use of animal forms in symbolism or decorative art; 3, worship of images in animal form.—adj. zo″ö-mor′phic.

zo-ön (zō′ŏn), n. [pl. zoa (-ə)], [< Gk. zō(i)on, animal], Zoöl., a complete animal; the total product of a fertilized animal ovum.—adj. zo′ön-al (-ŏn-ăl).

zo-ön-o-my (zō-ŏn′ō-mĭ), n. [< Gk. zō(i)on, animal + nomos, law], the science that treats of the laws of animal life.

Zo-öph-a-ga (zō-ŏf′ə-gə), n.pl. [< Gk. zō(i)on, animal + phagein, to eat], Zoöl., 1, flesh-eating mammals; 2, the flesh-eating and insectivorous marsupials, such as the opossum.

zo-öph-a-gous (zō-ŏf′ə-gŭs), adj. flesh-eating; living on animal food.

zo-ö-phyte (zō′ō-fīt), n. [< Gk. zō(i)on, animal + phuton, plant], Zoöl., any animal that has the appearance of a plant, as some forms of coral.—adj. zo″ö-phyt′ic (-fĭt′ĭk).

zo-ö-sperm (zō′ō-spûrm), n. [< Gk. zō(i)on, animal + sperma, seed], 1, a spermatozoön; 2, a zoöspore.—adj. zo″ö-sper-mat′ic.

zo-ö-spore (zō′ō-spōr), n. [< Gk. zō(i)on, animal + spora, seed], Bot., a freely swimming, or motile, spore, or reproductive cell of a flowerless plant, as in some algæ and fungi.—adj. zo″ö-spor′ic (-spŏr′ĭk).

zo-öt-ic (zō-ŏt′ĭk), adj. [see zoön], displaying indications of former life; containing organic remains: said of soils or rocks.

zo-öt-o-my (zō-ŏt′ō-mĭ), n. [< Gk. zō(i)on, animal + -tomia, a cutting], the study of the structure of animals, especially of animals other than man.—n. zo-öt′o-mist.—adj. zo″ö-tom′ic (zō″ō-tŏm′ĭk); zo″ö-tom′i-cal.—adv. zo″ö-tom′i-cal-ly.

zor-il (zŏr′ĭl), n. [< Sp. zorrilla < zorra, fox], 1, a meat-eating animal of Africa, resembling the skunk; 2, a Central and South American skunk.

Zo-ro-as-ter (zō″rō-ăs′tẽr), n. [< Lat. Zoroastres < O.Pers. Zarathustra], a Persian prophet, founder of the ancient Persian religion. Also, Za″ra-thus′tra (zä″rə-thōōs′trə).

Zo-ro-as-tri-an (zō″rō-ăs′trĭ-ăn), adj. pertaining to Zoroaster, the founder of the ancient Persian religion (about 1000 B. C.), or to his doctrines as recorded in the Avesta:—n. a follower of Zoroaster. Also, Zar″a-thus′tri-an (zär″ə-thōōs′trĭ-ăn).

Zo-ro-as-tri-an-ism (zō″rō-ăs′trĭ-ăn-ĭzm), n. the religion of the Persians before the conversion of the majority to Mohammedanism.

zos-ter (zŏs′tẽr), n. [Lat. < Gk.], Gk. Costume, a girdle: Med., herpes zoster; shingles.

Zou-ave (zōō-äv′), n. [Fr. < Zouaoua, nat. name of an Algerian tribe], 1, in the French army until 1914, an infantryman wearing a brightly colored uniform similar to Algerian dress; originally, a member of either of two battalions serving in Algeria and composed mainly of natives, noted for their dash and bravery; 2, a member of a body of volunteer regiments in the American Civil War, which adopted a similar dress and drill.

ZOUAVE (def. 2)

zounds (z o u n d z), interj. [contr. of God's wounds], Archaic, an exclamatory oath of anger or wonder.

Zr Chem., the symbol [Zr] for zirconium, a blackish gray metallic element, widely distributed in nature.

Zu-lu (zōō′lōō), n. [pl. -lus (-lōōz)], [S.Afr. nat. name], one of a warlike native tribe of Natal, South Africa:—adj. of or pertaining to the Zulus.

ZULUS

Zu-ñi (zōō′nyĕ; sōō′-), n. [pl. Zuñis (-nyĕz); Zuñi] [Amer.Ind.], one of a tribe of Pueblo Indians of New Mexico.—adj. Zu′ñi-an (-nyĭ-ăn).

zwie-back (zwē′bäk″; tsvē′-), n. [Ger. < zwei, two + backen, to bake], a kind of biscuit or roll first baked in the form of a loaf and then sliced and browned in the oven. Also, Zwie′back″.

Zwing-li-an (tsvĭng′lĭ-ăn; zwĭng′glĭ-ăn), adj. [< proper name], pertaining to Ulrich Zwingli (1484–1531), leader of the Swiss Protestant Reformation; also, pertaining to his doctrines, differing from Luther's mainly in a disbelief in the real presence of the body of Christ in the sacrament:—n. a follower of Zwingli.

zy-go-ma (zī-gō′mə), n. [pl. -mata (-mə-tə)], [< Gk. zugōma, yoke], Anat., 1, a bony arch on the side of the skull, formed by the joining of the malar bone of the face with the zygomatic process of the temporal bone on the side of the head: also called zygomatic arch or bone (see cranium, illus.); 2, a process of the temporal bone: also called zygomatic process; 3, the malar bone itself.—adj. zy″go-mat′ic (zī″gō-măt′ĭk; zĭg″ō-).

zy-go-mor-phic (zī″gō-môr′fĭk; zĭg″ō-), adj. [< Gk. zugon, yoke + morphē, form], Bot. and Zoöl., bilaterally symmetrical; the same on both sides, as organs or parts that can be divided into symmetrical halves only by a plane passing lengthwise through the axis.—adj. zy″go-mor′phous (-fŭs).

zy-go-spore (zī′gō-spōr; zĭg′ō-), n. [< Gk. zugon, yoke + spora, seed], Bot., a spore formed by the union of two gametes, or reproductive cells.

zy-gote (zī′gōt; zĭg′ōt), n. [< Gk. zugōtos, yoked], Biol., the product of the union of two gametes, or reproductive cells; a fertilized ovum, or a zygospore.—adj. zy-got′ic.

zy-mase (zī′māz), n. [see zyme], Chem., a soluble ferment found in a yeast cell, to which the fermentative action of yeast is probably due.

zyme (zīm), n. [< Gk. zumē, leaven], that which causes fermentation: Med., a virus or ferment supposed to be the specific cause of diseases that result from the multiplication of disease germs in the body.—adj. zy′mic (zī′mĭk; zĭm′ĭk).

zy-mol-o-gy (zī-mŏl′ō-jĭ), n. [pl. -gies (-jĭz)], [< Gk. zumē, leaven + -logia, a study], the science or study of fermentation.—n. zy-mol′o-gist.—adj. zy″mo-log′ic (zī″mō-lŏj′ĭk).—adj. zy″mo-log′i-cal.

zy-mom-e-ter (zī-mŏm′ē-tẽr), n. [< Gk. zumē, leaven + metron, a measure], an instrument for measuring the progress of fermentation.

zy-mo-sis (zī-mō′sĭs), n. [< Gk. zumōsis, fermentation], Pathol., 1, a fermentation; the development and propagation of an infectious disease, characterized by the growth of bacteria and their products; 2, any contagious or infectious disease.

zy-mot-ic (zī-mŏt′ĭk), adj. pertaining to, or caused by, fermentation: Med., working through the body like a ferment: said of an infectious or contagious disease, such as smallpox.

zy-mur-gy (zī′mûr-jĭ), n. [< Gk. zumē, leaven + ergon, work], Chem., a department of chemistry that treats of the scientific principles used in manufacture wherein fermentation is employed, as in the making of vinegar, wine, beer, and alcohol.

zy-thum (zī′thŭm), n. [< Gk. zuthos, zythum], a malt beer made by the ancient Egyptians.

NOTES.—The figures indicate the values of the letters when used as numerical symbols.—For runic alphabet see cut in main vocabulary under rune.—[1] The Hebrew alphabet had originally no symbols for vowel sounds. Later, a set of dots and dashes was devised, called vowel points, to be written over, under, or within the consonant symbols. Hebrew is written from right to left on the page.— [2] Smooth breathing.— [3] Rough breathing.— [4] When final, ς; in other positions, σ.— [5] The Greek letters Φ, X, Ψ were not needed in the Latin alphabet, and were appropriated by the Romans as numerical symbols in the forms M (see note 12) and D (see note 9), X, and L (see note 11).— [6] The Arabic alphabet is used, with few modifications, by the Moslems of Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, and Egypt; by the Arabs themselves; by European Turks; by Syrians, Persians, and Afghans; by the Mohammedans of India; and by the Tatars. The vowel sounds were originally not indicated; later, a set of smaller signs, resembling the vowel points of Hebrew, was devised. The letters are shown here as printed when they stand alone: when connected with a preceding, or a following, letter, they are slightly modified in form. Arabic, like Hebrew, is written from right to left.— [7] Deep guttural spirant.— [8] Originally, as a numeral, ⊙, from Greek θ or Θ: taken as initial letter of Latin centum, hundred, and hence written C.— [9] Originally, as a numeral, half of the symbol ↀ, for 1,000. See notes 5 and 12.— [10] Formerly same as I.— [11] Originally, as a numeral, adapted from Greek ψ, Ψ, written ↓, ⊥, then L. See note 5.— [12] Originally, ↀ, from Greek φ, Φ, used as the symbol for 1,000, and written ⅭIↃ, ⅭIↃ, then M. See note 5.— [13] Formerly same as V.— [14] As a letter, a variant form of U. As a numeral, perhaps, originally the upper half of X, for 10.— [15] Not used in medieval Latin.— [16] See note 5.— [17] The alphabet is in the style of type called by the Germans Fraktur. Roman type is also extensively used, especially in scientific works. A script alphabet corresponding to the Fraktur is used along with the common Roman script.— [18] Developed mainly from the Greek alphabet.— [19] As final element of a diphthong, written Й, й.— [20] Indicates voiceless or palatalized pronunciation of preceding consonant.— [21] Silent; indicates voiced pronunciation of preceding consonant.

ALPHABETS FOR THE BLIND

REVISED BRAILLE ALPHABET, GRADE 1½

Each letter is represented by dots embossed, or raised above the surface of the paper, and arranged in a given way in the six positions provided for in the Braille cell. In the illustration, only the heavy dots are to be considered raised; the light dots are given to make clearer the location of the raised dots in the cell.

The first ten letters, all formed in the upper part of the cell, when preceded by the numeral sign, represent figures. In addition, many of the letter signs are used to represent common whole words, as but, it, not, etc., or common combinations of letters within a word, as th; and certain signs preceding a word or letter indicate that it is to be capitalized or italicized, as shown in the following specimen. Further arrangements of dots, not used as letter signs, and hence not given here, represent additional words and word elements, as for, -ed, etc., and letters with various diacritical marks, as ā, å, é, etc.

THE ALPHABET IN MOON TYPE

The Moon type is especially adapted to the use of persons who have become blind in adult life. It consists of raised, or embossed, symbols, most of which are similar to Roman capitals. The reader feels along the first line of symbols from left to right, and returns along the second line from right to left, being guided from one line to the following by a bracket joining the appropriate ends of the lines. Two raised dots, side by side, indicate a full stop; one dot, a shorter pause. The alphabet is given below in alphabetical order, and also classified so as to bring similar symbols together in groups. The letters P (◭) and Q (◮) are shown in the key lying down, S is shown in script, and b, f, and m as small letters, to draw attention to their similarity under these conditions to the corresponding Moon symbols. The alphabet contains only seven designs, which are given different values according to the way they are turned or placed.

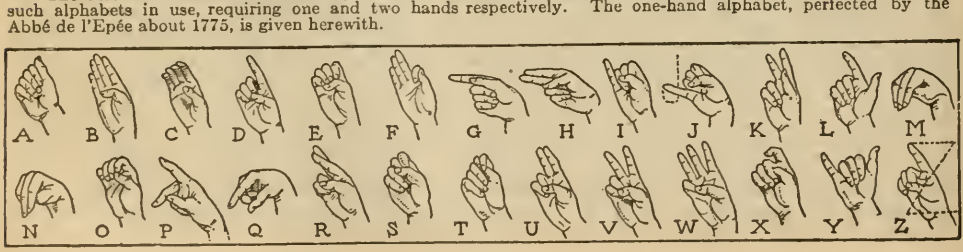
ALPHABET FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB

The deaf and dumb communicate by means of signs comprising a so-called manual alphabet. There are two such alphabets in use, requiring one and two hands respectively. The one-hand alphabet, perfected by the Abbé de l'Epée about 1775, is given herewith.



ALPHABETS FOR TELEGRAPHY AND SIGNALING

I. International, or Continental, Morse, also known as the General Service Code: used in commercial radio, in the Army and Navy, and for general signaling. Signals can be transmitted electrically; also, by day, with hand flags or sun flashes, or, by night, with torches, lanterns, or other lights. If the distance is not too great, sound can be used by means of a whistle, drum, bugle, or the like.

II. American Morse: used in the United States for telegraphic transmission. For numerals in I and II, see below.

III. Ardois System: a code for use at sea, in which the International Morse is adapted to transmission by the display of lights hung from a staff, mast, or yard.

KEY: ● red = dot (in the International Morse); ○ white = dash.

IV, V. Semaphore Signals: two-arm signals, transmitted by hand flags or by a machine. On the machine a short third arm, or indicator, is displayed on the right of the sender. A special signal indicates "Numerals follow," thus:

VI. International Code of Signals: hoists of special flags used for marine signaling

KEY: □ white; ■ black; ▨ red; ▤ blue; ▩ yellow. (Compare heraldry, illus., for corresponding key.)

Single Flag, or Wigwag. Four basic signals are employed, messages being sent by International Morse. Position is used to call a station; front is used once, twice, or three times to indicate end of word, sentence, or message respectively.

Numerals are given as follows in Morse (I and II):

ALPHABET OF THE INTERNATIONAL PHONETIC ASSOCIATION

Of the many systems of phonetic printing which have been worked out, the only one which is widely accepted as practical and reliable is that of the International Phonetic Association, given in the Chart below, which is widely used in teaching languages, in noting dialectal variations from the standard pronunciation of any literary language, and in transcribing languages which have never been reduced to writing. The Chart covers sounds heard in a considerable variety of languages of both hemispheres, and is designed to convey as far as possible the nature of the sound which each symbol represents by indicating where and how the sound is articulated. The meanings of the symbols are, in addition, fully explained in the remarks following the Chart.

CHARACTERS OF THE INTERNATIONAL PHONETIC ALPHABET

NOTES.—The numbers refer to the explanatory remarks below.—An asterisk [*] indicates that the corresponding sound is not heard in standard English, German, French, Italian, or Spanish, and hence is unfamiliar to the average American reader.—Some symbols appear twice. These, as indicated by their respective positions on the Chart, represent sounds articulated in two places at once, such as o͡o (u, No 67 on the Chart), made by rounding the lips in front and drawing the tongue to the back. Such symbols are numbered in the more important position, and inclosed in parentheses in the other.—Of two consonant symbols separated in the Chart by a comma, the first represents a voiceless, the second a voiced articulation, as p, b.—Two vowel symbols so separated are pronounced without, and with, rounding or pouting of the lips, respectively, as i, y (pronounced, in the key of this Dictionary, ē, ü).

EXPLANATORY REMARKS

NOTES.—Boldface letters are to be taken as characters of the Chart. They are explained in lightface letters in square brackets, which are to be taken as characters in the Pronunciation Key printed at the foot of the page, and explained on pages xviii–xix. This key, however, was designed for English, and a key made for one language only is inadequate for the sounds here represented. In some cases therefore a dagger [†] is used, to give warning that the pronunciation as given by the key letter in square brackets is only approximate.—An English word, if exemplifying a pronunciation characteristic of England, is called British; of the United States, American, of both, English.

CONSONANTS

1, 2. p, b [p, b]: English pin, bow.—3. m [m]: English man.—4. ɸ: the Japanese f, a voiceless bilabial continuant made by blowing between lips pressed together.—5. β: the preceding voiced: the sound of Spanish b or v between vowels, or of Dutch w in some positions.—6, 7. ɧ, w: [hw,w]: American when, English watch.—8, 9. ɥ, ɥ [ü used with consonantal force, voiceless and voiced]: French puis, for the voiceless sound; lui for the voiced sound.

10. ɱ: a sound like a nasalized v, made by putting the lower lip against the upper teeth: heard in Spanish and Italian.—11, 12. f, v [f, v]: English father, very.

13, 14. t, d [t, d]: English tin, door.—15. n [n]: English name.—16. l [l†]: English live: used also for Italian l, made with the convex upper surface of the tongue.—17. ɬ [l†]: English mill, children: the so-called dark l, made nearer the back of the mouth: also heard in Russian and Portuguese.—18. r [r†]: the Italian and Scotch r, trilled with the tip of the tongue.—19. ʃ [r†]: used for the so-called soft r of Spanish, as in pero, or in British very as sometimes pronounced: made by a single flap of the tongue.—20. ɾ: an r-like and ʒ-like voiced sound, intermediate between a continuant and a trill, heard in Czechish.—21, 22. θ, ð [th, th]: English thin, then.—23, 24. s, z [s, z]: English sing, zero.—25. ɹ [r†]: British red: an untrilled, tongue-point r heard in southern England and in the eastern and southern parts of the United States: sometimes used for ʃ (No. 19).—26. ɾ [r]: the ordinary American untrilled r, made with the tip of the tongue turned up and back: a very characteristic sound in most American speech.—27, 28. ʃ, ʒ [sh, zh]: English show, pleasure.

29 c [k] a k sound, made with the flat part of the tongue, somewhat back of the teeth, as in English key, keep.—30. ɟ [g]: the preceding sound voiced: English geese.—31 ɲ [ny'†]: approximately as ni in English onion: French and Italian gn, Spanish ñ.—32. ʎ [ly'†]: approximately as lli in English million: Italian gl, Spanish ll, Portuguese lh.—33. ç [kh†]: German ich: frequently mispronounced by foreigners as k, but a continuant, not a stop: sometimes heard in English in such words as hue: properly distinguished from the sound of German ch in ach, though in the text of this book [kh] is made to serve for both.—34. j [y]: English yet: nearly equivalent to the preceding sound voiced.

35, 36. k, ɡ [k, g]: English k, g (hard) before a back vowel, as in cool, good.—37 ŋ [ng]: English sing.—38. x [kh]: German ach, Scotch loch: a far deeper sound than in German ich.—39. ɣ: the preceding sound voiced: often heard in north Germany, as in wagen, and regular in Dutch, as in vlaggen.

40, 41. q, G: deep guttural k, g, heard in Arabic.—42. N: a uvular nasal, like a guttural ng-sound, occurring in Eskimo.—43. ʁ: a deep, voiceless, guttural sound, made somewhat like χ below, but as a trill instead of a continuant: Spanish j.—44. R [r†]: like the guttural, or uvular, trilled r common in German and French, and in Northumberland British.—45. χ: a deep, voiceless, guttural kh, heard in Arabic and in the Southern German highlands for the ch of ach or for initial k. 46. ʁ*: the preceding voiced: Arabic gh, heard also as the Danish variety of r and one of the Parisian varieties of French r.

47. ʔ: the so-called glottal catch, like a very slight cough, heard in German before initial stressed vowels, in Arabic, etc. —48. h [h]: English how.—49. ɦ: a voiced h sometimes heard in English aha, and common in Arabic and Czechish.

VOWELS

50, 51. i, y [ē, ü]: English machine, German für (French lune).—52. ɪ [i̇]: English fit.—53. ʏ [ü†]: the preceding sounded with rounded lips: a sound intermediate between those in French lune and French feu: heard in short German syllables, as in futtern.—54. e [ā†]: English fate: pronounced, however, without the change at the end from [ā] to [i̇] always heard in so-called English long a.—55. ø [ō]: the preceding with close rounding of the lips: German schön, French *peut*être.—56. ɛ [ĕ; or, when long, â]: English met, care.—57. œ [û†]: the preceding with open rounding of the lips: French peur: heard also in German in short syllables, as in gŏtter: nearly the same as [û] in English burn.—58. æ [ă]: American hat.—59. a [ȧ]: English ask, pass· a sound intermediate between the a of father and the a of (American) hat: common in French, as in Paris, la, but in popular American pronunciation tending to change into the a of hat.

60. ɑ [ŏ; or, when long, ă]: American bother, father.—61. ɒ [ȯ†]: a sound between the ȯ of dog and the short open o common in French, German, Italian, etc.: heard in the British pronunciation of hot.—62. ɔ [ȯ† or ȯ]: open o, as in French accorder, German sollen: also used, somewhat inadequately, usually with the sign of length [ɔː], for the vowel sound of all, cause.—63. ʌ: pronounced with the tongue placed for ɔ, but with the lips drawn back at the sides: sometimes heard in the British pronunciation of but, much.—64. o [ō†]: English stone: but without the change at the end from [ō] to [o͞o] almost always heard in so-called long o. —65. ʊ [ŭ]: American but, much.—66. ʊ [o͞o]: English put, foot.—67. u [o͞o]: English rule, tool.—68. ɯ *: pronounced with the tongue placed for [o͞o], but with the lips unrounded, or even slightly drawn back at the sides: heard in Gaelic, Japanese, Syriac, etc., and in slovenly American pronunciation of put, good.

69, 70. ə, ɐ: these symbols represent vowel sounds called obscure, usually unstressed, of neutral quality, made without observable effort to put the mouth and tongue into any definite position. The symbol ə is often used for both sounds; but often when a distinction is desirable, ə represents a neutral vowel sound made by a slightly elevated tongue position, while ɐ is used for the sound made with the tongue in somewhat lower position. The two sounds are approximately given in the final syllables of Hannah, McCul*lough*. In the Pronunciation Key of this book they are given by various symbols [ĕ, ĕ, ă, ȧ, ŏ, ŭ], according to the English spelling.

71–76. ɨ*, ʉ*, ɘ*, ɵ*, ɜ [ŭ], ɐ*. As shown by their position on the chart, these sounds cannot be clearly classified as made in the front or back of the mouth. ɨ and ʉ are intermediate between i [ē] and u [o͞o], ɨ being closer to i, ʉ to u. ɘ and ɵ, ɜ and ɐ are similarly related to e [ā] and o [ō], ɛ [ĕ or â] and ɔ [ȯ]. The sounds ɨ and ʉ, ɘ and ɵ, and ɐ, may be heard in heavy, slovenly pronunciation of English mit, put, tale, tore, ball; ɜ is the u [ŭ] of burn. These all occur as standard sounds in some languages, as ɜ does in English.

ADDITIONAL MARKS

Length of a sound may be indicated by ː following the symbol, as palm [pɑːm]; half length by ˑ following the symbol, as father [fɑˑðəɹ].

Stress is indicated by ′ or ˙, commonly placed immediately after the stressed vowel, as attack [ʊtæ′k].

Tenseness and lazness of position are indicated by ′ and ` respectively; as French site [sít], English sit [si̇t].

Syllabic consonants may be marked thus: n̩, r̩; as patter [pæ′tr̩]; the closing consonantal part of a diphthong, or, in English, of a long vowel, may be marked u̯, i̯; as hay [he͡i̯], stone [sto͡u̯n].

Nasalized vowels are marked with ~; thus, ã = French an.

ALPHABETS OF SHORTHAND

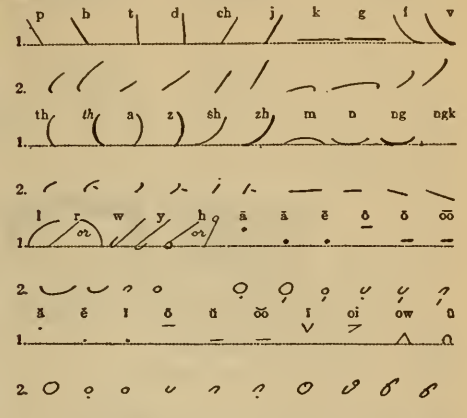
Shorthand is handwriting based on shorter and simpler outlines than those used in longhand. The leading systems utilize strictly phonetic writing, employing basic strokes for the consonant sounds of any given word or expression, and additions or modifications for the vowel sounds. Special word signs and abbreviations are used for frequently recurring phrases.

The Isaac Pitman system, published in 1837, has been the basis of a number of modern systems. The Gregg system, published in 1888, exhibited a wide departure from the Pitman systems; it is now widely used. Both systems are given in the examples in the next column, which show the consonant and vowel sounds, and a sample text reproduced in the correspondence style.

CONSONANT AND VOWEL SOUNDS

1, Isaac Pitman, 2, Gregg.

Shorthand writing consists mainly of outlines representing consonant sounds. Vowels in Pitman are placed alongside the outlines, which are written in high, middle, or low position, according to that of the accented vowel in each word. Gregg does not use position writing: the vowels are incorporated into the outlines. The distinguishing marks resembling dots and short dashes used with some Gregg signs may often be omitted in actual practice. The explanatory letters represent sounds as indicated in the pronunciation key used in this book.



Shorthand systems also provide a number of condensed signs, equivalent to abbreviations, for complete words. The reporting style abbreviates further by omitting words or parts of words, and by joining two or more words into one outline.

In Pitman shorthand certain consonant sounds frequently combined with others may also be expressed by adding to basic strokes a set of hooks, circles, etc.: the R hook (indicating r following another consonant), as [1]pray, [2]offer; L hook (l following another consonant), as [3]play, [4]evil; N hook, as [5]pen, [6]fun; F or V hook (after straight strokes), as [7]puff, [8]Jove; Shon (tion) hook, as [9]passion, [10]notion; S or Z (small) circle, Ses (large) circle, as [11]sip, [12]possible, [13]passes; St loop, as [14]stuffs, [15]supposed, [16]posts; Con or Com dot, as [17]contest, [18]combine; Ing dot, as [19]seating, [20]resting. Consonant strokes of half length add the sound of t or d, as [21]grade, [22]pitched, [23]cottage; consonant strokes of double length add the sound of ther, ter, or der, as [24]smother, [25]kinder.

The words used above as illustrations are written in Pitman Shorthand as follows:

2 push button outlet, for given number of buttons.

8 annunciator, for given number of points.

(4) electric ceiling outlet, 4 lamps.

4/2 electric and gas ceiling outlet (4 lamps, 2 burners).

gas ceiling outlet.

(2) electric bracket outlet, 2 lamps.

electric and gas bracket outlet.

4/2 gas bracket outlet.

2 wall or baseboard electric outlet.

4 electric floor outlet.

(D) drop cord outlet.

arc lamp outlet.

S^1 single-pole switch outlet.

S^2 double-pole switch outlet.

S^3 three-way switch outlet.

S^D automatic door-switch outlet.

S^E electrolier switch outlet.

distribution panel.

junction or pull box.

motor control outlet.

transformer.

exposed branch wire.

wire connecting floors.

private telephone outlet.

public telephone outlet.

bell outlet.

buzzer outlet.

speaking tube.

(C) watchman's clock outlet.

watchman's station outlet.

(TC) master time-clock outlet.

secondary time-clock outlet.

door opener.

special outlet for signal system.

battery outlet.

O» cotyledons folded together lengthwise along a middle axis, and radicle dorsal.
O‖‖ cotyledons folded twice (O‖‖‖, if thrice), and radicle dorsal.
× crossed with: sign of a hybrid.

CHEMISTRY

The Russian chemist Mendeléeff, upon arranging the elements in the order of their atomic weights, pointed out that, with a few exceptions, their physical and chemical properties, as specific gravity, melting point, boiling point, hardness, ductility, color, etc., vary in a regular way, the same values for these properties recurring more or less nearly at periodic points in the series; that is, the properties of the elements are a periodic function of their atomic weights.

The arrangement of the chart below is intended to exhibit this periodicity. The small superior figures indicate the atomic numbers of the elements; that is, their position in the atomic weight series. The horizontal rows show the elements within each period. Actually, there is a sort of double periodicity, by which some periods (2, 3, 8) are short, containing 8 elements, and some (4, 5, 6, 7) are long, containing 13 or 18 elements. It is found that the valence of the elements, starting at 0 or 1, tends to increase regularly within each half period, or short period. The vertical columns contain elements in corresponding locations within the periods, and constitute groups of elements, the properties of which, while similar, vary in a progressive way. The double periodicity divides some of the vertical groups into families, as is indicated by placing the names of some of the elements at the sides of the boxes. Thus the elements in Group 0 are all inert gases, with a valence of 0; Group I is made up of two families, that of the alkali metals Li, Na, K, Rb, Cs, Vi, with similar properties, placed at the left side of the boxes, and that containing Cu, Ag, and Au, the properties of which are also similar, placed at the right. In Group VII are the halogens, F, Cl, Br, I, Ab, the first two of which are gases, the third a liquid, and the fourth and fifth solids, showing the progressing melting point.

Hydrogen's properties place it in a period by itself. Elements in Group VIII are known as transition elements, their properties being intermediate between those of the elements in the next preceding and following half period. About 16 elements, the rare earth metals, including those numbered 57 to 71 and some others, all trivalent, do not appear to fit the general scheme, and their place is still under discussion. The closeness of their relationship makes it possible that these elements are modifications of one element. The vacant spaces in the original system of Mendeléeff were supposed to be due to undiscovered elements; the properties, so far as now known, of the elements Ga, Sc, and Ge, discovered since the law was formulated, and more recently of Ma and Re, discovered in 1925, and of Il, in 1926, have closely verified the predictions made on the basis of their location on the table. The metal uranium terminates the series, there being no known element with greater atomic weight.

THE SYMBOLS OF THE CHEMICAL ELEMENTS ARRANGED ACCORDING TO THE PERIODIC LAW

KEY.—In the table, the character of the element at ordinary temperatures is indicated by the way the symbol is printed, as follows: light-faced Roman [H], gas; light-faced italic [Hg], liquid; bold-faced Roman [Na], solid. The rare earth metals are printed in bold-faced italic [La], and are inclosed, with two exceptions, in a special box.

℅ account; as, Wm. Jones ℅ with J. Brown.
B/L bill of lading.
c/f or C/F carried forward.
c/d or C/D carried down.
L/C letter of credit.
X-c or X-cp. ex coupon; without the right to coupons, as of a bond.
ExD, X-d, X-div. ex dividend; without right to dividend.
* follows stock ticker quotation to denote correctness.
A1 highest class or grade; also, in Lloyd's Register of Shipping, the mark of a first-class vessel. The letter indicates that the hull is well built and seaworthy; the figure that the rigging, anchors, cables, etc., are in efficient condition. The figure 2 would indicate less than No. 1 standard quantity or quality. When a vessel originally rated A reaches a certain age, it is registered with a red A.
Æ third class vessel, fit to carry perishable cargo only on short voyages.
E a vessel fit to carry, on long voyages, only cargo not liable to sea damage.
I a vessel fit to carry cargo not liable to sea damage on short voyages only.
MC ship's boilers and machinery found upon inspection to be in good order and safe working condition.

ELECTRICITY

In electrical formulas the symbols and notation used in mathematics are freely employed. Among the letters used as special symbols or abbreviations are the following:

I unit of current strength, or ampere.
E unit of electromotive force, or volt.
R unit of resistance, or ohm.
Q unit of quantity, or coulomb.
P unit of power, or watt.
W unit of work or energy, or joule.
C unit of electrostatic capacity, or farad.
L unit of inductance, or henry.

In drawing designs for electrical construction work, especially for radio hook-ups, the following symbols are used. See also wiring symbols used by architects, page 1166.

MATHEMATICS

+ plus; and; as, 3 + 2 = 5; also used following a number to mean increased by a certain amount, usually not large enough to raise the last digit of the number by one; as, 12.666+.
− minus, less; as 6 − 3 = 3; also used following a number, to mean diminished by a certain amount, usually not large enough to reduce the last digit of the number by one; as, 8.999 + 1.000 = 10−.
× multiplied by; as 6 × 2 = 12. Multiplication is also indicated by a dot placed between factors; as, 5·5·4 = 100. When the factors, except the first, are not numbers, multiplication is indicated by placing them in juxtaposition, one after another, with no intervening sign; as, $xyz = x \times y \times z$; $2a = 2 \times a$; $(x-a)(x-b) = (x-a) \times (x-b)$.
÷ divided by; as, 6 ÷ 2 = 3; $(x-a) \div (x-b)$.
− or / divided by; as, $\frac{a}{b}$; $\frac{a+b}{a-b}$; $^1/_2$; $a/(a+b)$.
= equals; also, in proportions, as (see :: below)
≏ is equivalent to.
≡ is identically equal to; equal by definition to.
± plus or minus; as, the square root of 4 is ± 2; also, in sciences involving quantitative determination, used after a figure determined by observation, to introduce the probable error.
> is greater than; as, 6 > 5.
< is less than; as, 5 < 6.
≧ or ≮ is equal to or greater than; is not less than.
≦ or ≯ is equal to or less than; does not exceed.
: is to; divided by: used in ratios and proportions.
:: as; equals; as, 6 : 3 :: 8 : 4 (read: 6 is to 3 as 8 is to 4; or, 6 divided by 3 equals 8 divided by 4): used between ratios.
∼ the difference between; as, a and b being positive (or signless) numbers, $a \sim b$ means $a - b$ or $b - a$, according as a or b is the greater.
∝ varies as; is proportional to; as $a \propto b$.
∠ angle; as, $\angle ABC = \angle DEF$.
└ right angle.
△ triangle.
□ square.
▭ rectangle.
○ circle; circumference.
⌒ arc (of a circle).
∥ parallel; is parallel to.
⊥ perpendicular; is perpendicular to.
° degrees (of arc); as, 30°.
′ minutes (of arc); as, 30′; also, feet.
″ seconds (of arc); as, 30″; also, inches.
— vinculum, ( ) parentheses, [ ] brackets, { } braces: indicate that the quantities included are affected in the same manner, or treated as a single quantity; as, $a + b = (a + b)$; $2[a + b] = 2a + 2b$.
√ the square root; as, $\sqrt{9} = 3$, $\sqrt{100} = 10$. To denote a root other than the square root, a superior figure (the index), expressing degree, is placed before the sign; as, $\sqrt[3]{x}$, the cube root of x; $\sqrt[5]{x^2 + y^3}$, the fifth root of $x^2 + y^3$.
′, ″, ‴, etc., prime; two prime, or second; three prime, or third, etc.: used to distinguish analogous quantities; as, a'' (read: a second, or a two prime).

^{1}, ^{2}, ^{n}, etc., indices, indicating the power to which a quantity is raised; as, 3^3, a^n.

∞ infinity; indefinitely great.

∂ partial differentiation; as $D^3_{xx}y = \frac{\partial^3}{\partial t \partial x^2} y$ (read: third derivative of y, once with respect to t, and twice with respect to x).

$\int$ integral sign. $\int_a^b$ integral between limits a and b.

! factorial; also, $\llcorner$; as, 4!, or $\llcorner^4$ $(=4 \times 3 \times 2 \times 1)$.

Δ or δ finite difference or increment.

π or pi the ratio (3.14159265+) of the circumference to the diameter of a circle.

e or ϵ the base (2.7182818+) of the natural (Napierian) system of logarithms; also, the eccentricity of a conic section.

M modulus of a system of logarithms; especially, the modulus (0.432429448+) of the common system, of which the base is 10.

s or s second; seconds (time).

m or m minute; minutes (time).

h or h hour; hours.

g the acceleration of gravity; at latitude 45°, at sea level, approximately 32.17 feet per second.

f function; $f(x)$, function of x. Also, F. Other signs are used to indicate functions, as ϕ, ψ, π, χ.

R radius.

C circumference.

d differential of; as, dx.

D derivative (differential coefficient); as, $D_x y$ (read: derivative of y with respect to x).

δ variation, as, δx, variation of x.

Σ the sum of.

$\therefore$ therefore.

$\because$ because; since.

. and , In America, the period separates integral and decimal parts of a number, the comma divides the integral into conveniently read groups of digits, usually three. The usage in Europe is generally the reverse. A number written 6,374,421.62 in America would be written 6.374.421,62 in Europe.

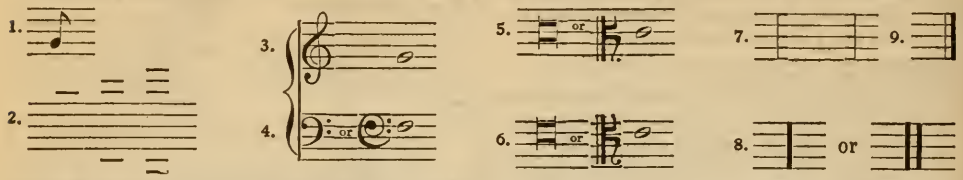
MUSIC

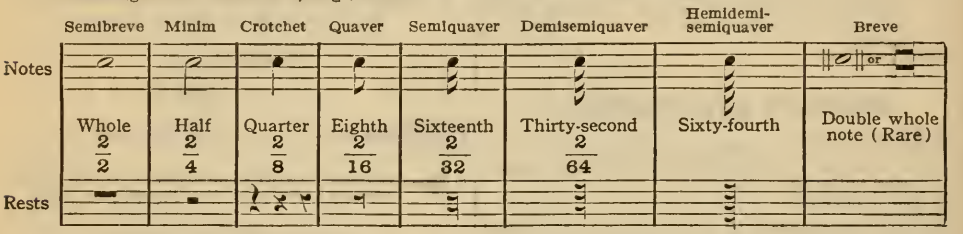
The principal symbols used in printing modern music are given below, with brief explanations of their meaning. In many cases fuller information will be found by referring to the appropriate word in the main vocabulary.



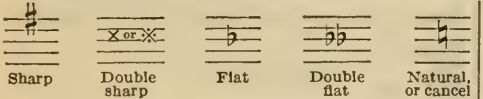
1. Staff (five parallel lines making four spaces, each line and each space marking one degree), with note, consisting typically of a head, stem, and one or more pennants, or hooks. 2. Ledger lines, used to extend the compass of the staff above or below. 3. Treble staff, marked by G clef, with a whole note on the G line, which is marked as such by the fact that the center of the main curve of the G clef falls on this line. 4. Bass staff, marked by F clef (in two forms), with a whole note on the F line, on which the principal point of the F clef falls. 3, 4. When the notes in two or more staffs are to be rendered at the same time, the staffs are connected at the left ends by a straight line and a brace. 5. C clef (in two forms), designating the middle line of the staff as middle C, 6. C clef (in two forms) designating the fourth line of the staff as middle C. 3–6. The G clef, F clef, and C clef on a staff indicate that the degree marked is G above middle C, F below middle C, or middle C, respectively, and thus fix the significance of all degrees above or below. 7. Bars, or vertical lines cutting the staff. One measure is contained between successive bars. 8. Double bar (in two forms): used to mark the end of a larger division, as a verse. 9. Close: used to mark the end of a composition.

The tone value, or pitch, of a note is indicated by the location of its head on a line or space of one of the staffs, or on a line or space above or below a staff whose position relative to the staff is marked by ledger lines. Each line or space is called a degree; the pitch indicated by each degree in the treble staff and bass staff is shown in an illustration in the main vocabulary under degree, and, for the degrees above and below the staffs, in an illustration under music. The stem of a note is turned up or down from the head according to convenience.

The time value, or duration, of a note or of a rest is indicated by its special form, as shown below; and the notes are named according to their time value, as given above the cut:



A dot placed after a note or a rest increases its value one half, and two dots, a half and a quarter. This notation is used with the effect of an abbreviation, thus: $\text{♩.} = \text{♩}\overset{\frown}{\text{♪}}$; $\text{♩..} = \text{♩}\overset{\frown}{\text{♪}}\text{♬}$.



A sharp or flat on any degree (that is, any line or space) indicates that notes placed on that degree represent tones a half step (or, if doubled, two half steps) higher or lower respectively than the tones normally indicated thereby. A natural, or cancel, on any degree cancels the effect of a preceding sharp or flat on that degree. If a double sharp or a double flat has preceded, one sharp or one flat is printed with the natural, as shown herewith:

The measure of a composition is indicated at the beginning of a composition by figures or other signs. The signs composed of figures are read as two cardinal numbers, the upper one first; as, $\frac{2}{2}$, two-two; $\frac{3}{8}$, three-eight. Duple and triple measures are known as simple; the others, compound. A few measures have special names, as indicated below in italics in parentheses.

Duple: $\frac{2}{2}$ or (alla capella); also, $\frac{2}{4}$.

Triple: $\frac{3}{2}$; $\frac{3}{4}$; $\frac{3}{8}$.

Quadruple: $\frac{4}{2}$ or (alla breve); $\frac{4}{4}$ or (common); also, $\frac{4}{8}$.

Sextuple: $\frac{6}{4}$; $\frac{6}{8}$.

Nine-beat: $\frac{9}{4}$; $\frac{9}{8}$.

Twelve-beat: $\frac{12}{4}$; $\frac{12}{8}$.

Less common measures are the following:

Five-beat: $\frac{5}{4}$; $\frac{5}{8}$. seven-beat: $\frac{7}{4}$; $\frac{7}{8}$.

Signs conveying to the performer instructions as to te manner of execution are the following:

Fermata, or hold: used to indicate that a note over which it is placed should be prolonged. If over a double bar it marks the end of a composition.

Staccato, indicating short, disconnected notes.

Tie, or bind, connecting two notes of the same degree. The effect is to produce one note of the combined time of the two, as the second note is not separately rendered.

Crescendo: gradually louder.

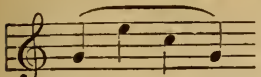
Decrescendo, or diminuendo: gradually softer.

Swell: first crescendo, then decrescendo.

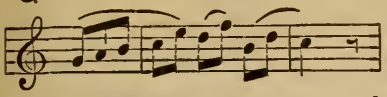
> Sforzando, or forzando: with sudden force or accent, also indicated by ∧, sf, sfz, fz.

down bow, up bow in music for stringed instruments.

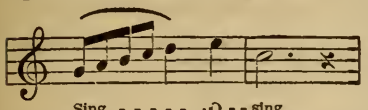
⌒ or ⌣ Slur, connecting two or more notes: used for four distinct purposes, as indicated below:



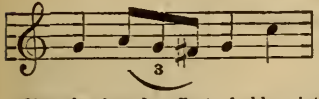
1, to indicate legato, or connected tones;



2, to indicate the phrasing desired;



3, in vocal music when two or more notes are sung to one syllable;

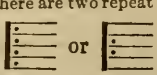


4, to indicate groups of notes, as triplets.

Signs having the effect of abbreviations, to save space or to convey directions more clearly than by the regular notation, are the following:

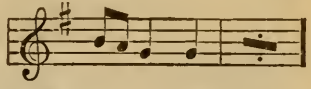
or

Repeat: used to indicate that the rendering of a passage ending at the point where this sign is used is to be repeated. If there are two repeat signs, paired, the first is printed thus: and only the passage included between the pair is to be repeated. Da Capo (D. C.) written above the staff is a direction to repeat from the beginning to a point indicated, often, by the word Fine. D. S. or Dal Segno (=from the sign) written above a repeat sign is an indication that repetition should begin at a specified sign, usually 𝄋 or 𝄉 placed above the staff at some preceding point.

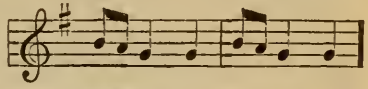


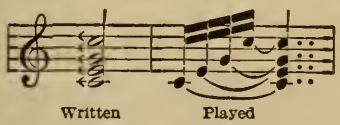
or

Repeat the preceding measure. Thus,

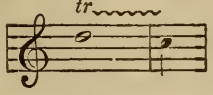


is played as follows:

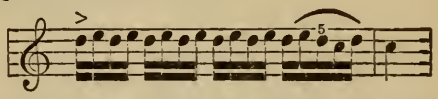




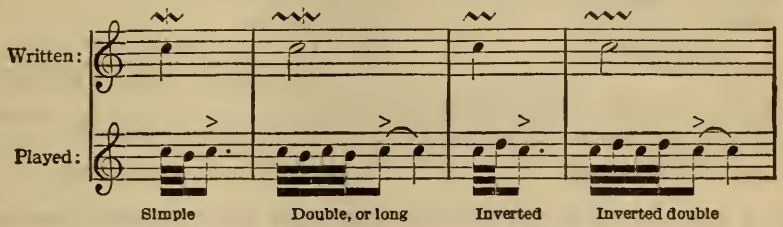
Arpeggio: the playing of the tones of a chord in rapid succession, beginning with the lowest.

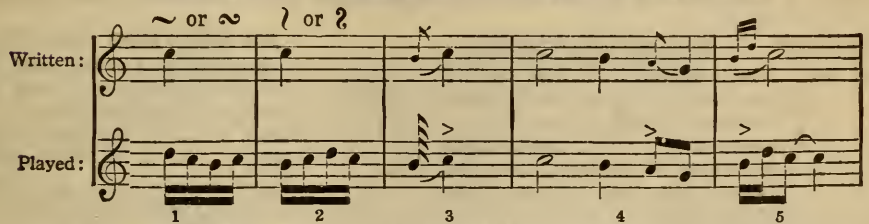


Trill, or shake, played as follows:



A mordent, or a grace made by alternating a principal tone with a tone one half step lower, and an inverted mordent, also called pralltriller, made by alternating a principal tone with a tone one step higher, are indicated as follows:





1, Turn. 2, Inverted turn. 3, Acciaccatura, or short appoggiatura. 4, Long appoggiatura. 5, Double appoggiatura.

PROOF READING

The duty of a proof reader is to see that the author's matter is expressed in the style of the publisher. Style has to do mainly with four things: uniformity of spelling, uniformity of punctuation, typography, and word division. The first and last branches are referred to some standard dictionary, the others are usually determined by an office style manual. The author can save much time and expense by verifying all spellings by one dictionary and by following a uniform system of punctuation and composition in his manuscript.

Proof readers' marks appear in two places: in the text and in the margin. For every mark in the text there must be a corresponding mark, or explanation, in the margin. The commonest marks in the text are the caret [∧], indicating merely an omission which is supplied in the margin, and a line crossing out something which is to be deleted, or for which a substitution is given in the margin; but several other marks are freely used in the text, as indicated below.

A word or character requiring attention should be scored through only if the reader directs a deletion or substitution. In correcting broken type, turned letters, wrong fonts, or the like, the reader should use underscoring, so as not to obscure the letters.

Corrections, explanations, etc., should be placed in the margin exactly opposite the appropriate mark in the text. Lines drawn from proof marks in the text to directions in the margin are bad proof reading, but in confused or heavily corrected proof are sometimes unavoidable.

In case there are several marks in the same line, the corrections should be arranged in the margin, separated by short vertical lines, in exactly the order in which the errors occur in the text.

dele: delete, take out: made in many forms, as ꝺ, ꝺ, ℌ.

close up; also, make a ligature, as æ for ae, ﬂ for fl.

insert space between characters or words.

turn: invert a type which prints a letter upside down.

depress space or lead which prints.

[(or]) bring type flush to left (or right).

⌊ (or ⌋) bring word or character to left (or right).

= or // straighten line.

□ space with em quad or indent one em.

× change broken or worn type.

¶ make a paragraph.

no ¶ or ⌐ join matter following to the preceding paragraph. The sign ⌐ connects the end of the first paragraph with the beginning of the second, and the words run on are written in the margin.

‖ align; especially, line up the ends of lines.

stet or ....let it stand: used when something originally marked for deletion is to be retained. The word stet is placed in the margin and dots placed under matter to be retained.

——— l, use italics: placed under the word or letter, and ital written in the margin; 2, change as indicated in margin.

═══ use small capitals: placed under the word or letter, and sc or sm caps written in the margin.

═══ use capitals: placed under the word or letter, and cap or caps written in the margin.

~~~ use boldface: placed under the word or letter, and bf written in the margin.

tr or ∫ transpose: the mark is also placed in the text about the transposed words or letters.

even # space evenly between words: carets, or inverted carets, are placed between the words affected.

⊓ (or ⊔) raise (or lower) word or letter.

All punctuation signs, superior or inferior figures or characters, reference marks, etc., are indicated in the text by caret or cancellation mark, as the case requires, and the appropriate mark or character placed in the margin.

⊙ insert period.

, or / insert comma.

“ ” insert quotation marks.

‘ insert apostrophe.

2 insert superior figure.

2 insert inferior figure.

* or ※ insert asterisk.

insert leaders.

insert period leaders.

1/em insert one-em dash (other lengths indicated by corresponding figures above the rule).

/=/ insert hyphen.

lc lower case: use small letter.

cap use capital letter.

sc or S.C. use small capital.

bf use bold-faced type.

ital use italic type.

rom use roman type.

wf or w. f. wrong font: set in type like rest of text.

ld or lds insert leads, or space between lines. A two-point lead, approximately 1/36 of an inch, is meant unless otherwise specified.

Out S.C. out, see copy: denotes an omission to be inserted, referring to the original manuscript for copy.

Qy or ? query to the author.

A circled abbreviation is to be spelled in full.

JIM MEETS LONG JOHN SILVER

Now, to tell you the truth, from the very first mention of Long John in Squire Trelawney's letter, I had taken a fear in my mind that he might prove to be the very one-legged sailor whom I had watched for so long at the old Benbow. But one look at the man before me was enough. I had seen the captain, and Black Dog,* and the blind man Pew, and I thought I knew what a buccaneer was like — a very different creature, according to me, from this clean and pleasant-tempered landlord.

I plucked up courage at once, crossed the threshold, and walked right up to the man where he stood, propped on his crutch, talking to a customer.

*One of the pirates.

— Treasure Island, by R. L. Stevenson.

PUNCTUATION

Listed below are the marks of punctuation as used in written or printed English, and certain additional typographical signs, akin to punctuation marks, found more especially in printed books.

, comma. : colon. — dash.
; semicolon. . period. ! exclamation.
? interrogation: also used to express doubt, as 25? feet.
(?) contemptuous doubt; as, my friend (?).
' apostrophe; as, John's book.
- hyphen; as, self-denial.
( ) parentheses; [ ] brackets. The brace, { or }, is used to inclose two or more lines.
/ acute accent; as, café.
\ grave accent; as, à la mode.
^ circumflex: over certain vowels; as, fenêtre. Also ⌢; ~.
~ tilde: indicating, when over n in words from the Spanish, the sound of ny; as, cañon. In Portuguese, the tilde over the first vowel of a diphthong indicates the nasal sound.
" " quotation marks; as, "blessed": also called quotes.
— macron, or mark of length; as, date (dāt), boot (bo͞ot).
⏑ breve: marking a short vowel or syllable; as, pet (pĕt).
¨ diæresis; as, naïve, zoölogy.
¸ cedilla; as, façade.
ˏ m ∧ caret: marking something to be inserted; as, hamer.
* * * ellipsis } indicating the omission of a . . . ellipsis } word or passage, a break
—— ellipsis } in the narrative, or the
---- ellipsis } like.
⁂ asterism. Also ⁂.
..... leaders.
. . . . . period leaders.
☞ index; hand; fist.
¶ paragraph.
[2] superior figure: often used to indicate the verse number of a chapter, or line number of a scene; as, Luke 3^{16}; Macbeth III:2^{25}; also used as a reference mark.
[a] superior letter.
* star; asterisk: in philological works used to mark forms not recorded, but assumed to have existed.
† dagger; obelisk: often used to mean obsolete or dead.
‡ double dagger.
§ section mark.
‖ parallel mark: see Mathematical Signs, page 1168.

Reference Marks. Any of various symbols, as the star, dagger, etc., may be placed before or after a word to refer to a footnote preceded by a similar mark, but superior figures or superior letters are generally used for this purpose.

TOPOGRAPHY

The following are the principal conventional signs used on maps issued by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey and by the United States Geological Survey. The contour map at the lower left would make a much more immediate appeal to the eye if printed in the conventional colors.

TYPOGRAPHY: SIZES, FACES, AND STYLES OF TYPE

The first movable types were cut in wood about 1450, probably by Johann Gutenberg of Mainz; and wood is still often used for sizes larger than 72 point. The individual movable type as now cast, with its named parts, is illustrated in the main vocabulary under type. Types as printed characters appear in several hundred varieties. The irregular and ornamental types are too various for classification; but the common standard types may be satisfactorily classified according to size, face, and style.

Size: The Point System. The size of type was formerly given by name; and in England this system is still often followed. In America, the point system is used, with approximately 72 points to the inch, meaning that in a 72-point type the body, not the printed character, is one inch high (see illustration of type in main vocabulary). Types may be cut in any size; the following exhibit gives the commonly used point sizes from 72 point down, with the name of the nearest equivalent named size. The sizes from 72 point to 14 point are shown in a style called Caslon Bold; from 12 point to 4 point, in Binny.

Smaller sizes are sometimes cast—3½ point, also called Brilliant, and 3 point, or Excelsior—; but they are rare; and 6½ point, or Mignonette (Emerald in England), is an odd size seldom used. Intermediate sizes not shown are 20 point (Paragon), 16 point (Columbian), and additional multiples of named sizes, as 32 point (Four-line Brevier), 28 point (Double English), etc.

Face: Type Series. Many styles of type are available in a variety of different forms, or faces, the commonest of which are exhibited below, printed uniformly in 8 point.

Modern faces:	Old style faces:
Roman lightface	Roman lightface
Italic lightface	Italic lightface
Roman boldface	Roman antique boldface
Italic boldface	Italic antique boldface

According to width, and independently of the heaviness of stroke, types of each size and style may be classified as Extra Condensed, Condensed, Lean, Standard, Fat, Expanded, and Extended. Some series include types known as Outline or Openface etc; but these are generally only in the larger sizes, and prepared for display or other special purpose.

Inline Shaded Rimmed

Style. Type styles may be divided roughly into those having broad and obvious characteristics of design, which we will call General Styles, and those showing the special art or peculiarities of some designer, or Special Styles. The latter are so numerous that only a limited selection can be shown. Nearly all styles are used in a considerable variety of faces, though generally only one face of each of the special styles is shown.

General Styles, with a few varieties of each:

Gothic, or Block Letter, printed as Lightface, Boldface, *Italic Boldface, CARD GOTHIC, etc.

Text, or Black Letter: Church Text, Old English, Tudor Black, German Text (Fraktur), etc.

Script, including Stationers Semiscript, Royal Script, Script Display, Steelplate Script, Cursive etc.

Typewriter, imitating various standard machines, as Underwood, Remington, etc.

Special Styles. See arrangement on next page.

TYPOGRAPHY: SPECIAL STYLES OF TYPE

Special Styles of type are very numerous, and subject to changes in popularity. Nearly all of them are made in several different faces, each face in several sizes, and many of the sizes in two or three widths; so that printed letters actually appear in several hundred varieties. In the following selection, only a few varieties from each of some of the more important styles can be shown; but by thinking of each example as capable of being varied in size, face, and general style, a good idea may be formed of the typographic resources available at a high-grade printing office.

WOODCRAFT

The following signs are widely used by woodsmen and campers. They are adapted, with permission, from the chapter on Signs, Signals, and Symbols, by Daniel Carter Beard, in the official handbook of the Boy Scouts of America.

✳ in Roman Catholic service books divides the verse of a psalm into two parts, showing when the response is to begin.
✠ a sign of the cross placed before the signature of the Pope and Roman Catholic bishops: also used in service books at the places where the sign of the cross is to be made. Also, +.

Sheets of paper are named according to a plan based on the number of leaves into which a sheet, originally of standard size, was folded, folio being folded once, with two leaves, quarto into four leaves, octavo into eight leaves, etc. In modern use the designations refer to approximate sizes of trimmed pages, as follows:

folio, fol., f°.....any large size
4to, 4°, read quarto.....9″ x 12″
8vo, 8°, read eightvo or octavo.....6″ x 9″
12mo, 12°, read twelvemo; sometimes, duodecimo.....5″ x 7½″
16mo, 16°, read sixteenmo; rarely, sextodecimo.....4½″ x 6½″
18mo, 18°, read eighteenmo; rarely, octodecimo.....4″ x 6½″

Rarely, the figures 24, 32, 36, 48, 64, 72, 96, 128 are similarly used with the suffix mo, or the small superior °, as 24mo, 24°, etc.

RAILROAD HAND SIGNALS

Railroad hand signals may be intensified by day by the use of a flag of any convenient color; at night, a lantern is used. A motion across the track with any color or object means "Stop."

1, apply brakes; 2, train parted; 3, stop; 4, go ahead; 5, back; 6, release brakes.

APPENDIX II

TABLES OF WEIGHTS, MEASURES, AND STANDARDS

THE METRIC SYSTEM

The Meter, unit of length, was originally intended to be, and approximately is, the ten-millionth part of a quadrant of a terrestrial meridian. The International Standard meter is, in practice, the distance between two defining lines on the International Prototype Meter bar at 0° C, at the International Bureau of Weights and Measures, at Sèvres, near Paris, France, accurate copies of which are supplied to the various countries to serve as national standards. The meter is exactly 39.37 United States standard inches long.

The Liter, unit of capacity, is equivalent to the space occupied by one kilogram of pure water at the temperature of its maximum density (4° C., nearly), under standard atmospheric pressure: approximately a cubic decimeter, more exactly 1.000027 cubic decimeter.

The Gram, unit of mass (weight), is one one-thousandth of the mass of the International Prototype Kilogram, which was intended to have the same mass as a cubic decimeter of pure water at the temperature of its maximum density (4° C., nearly), under standard atmospheric pressure.

In many of the arts and sciences and in certain branches of commerce and industry, but especially in theoretical physics and in much of the research work in physics and chemistry, lengths are generally stated in centimeters, masses (weights) in grams, and time in mean solar seconds, the system of units being called the C. G. S. (centimeter-gram-second) system.

The use of the Metric System was legalized in the United States on July 28, 1866.

THE METRIC SYSTEM SIMPLIFIED

The following tables of the metric system of weights and measures have been simplified as much as possible by omitting such denominations as are not in practical, everyday use in the countries where the system is used.

TABLES OF THE SYSTEM

Length

The denominations in practical use are the millimeter (mm.), centimeter (cm.), meter (m.), and kilometer (km.).

10 millimeters	1 centimeter
10 centimeters	1 decimeter
10 decimeters	1 meter
1,000 meters	1 kilometer

Weight

The denominations in use are the milligram (mg.), gram (g.), kilogram (kg.), and ton (metric ton).

1,000 milligrams	1 gram
1,000 grams	1 kilogram
1,000 kilograms	1 metric ton

Capacity

The denominations in use are cubic centimeter (c.c.) and liter (l.).

1.000 cubic centimeters	1 liter
100 liters	1 hectoliter

Relation of capacity and weight to length: a cubic decimeter is, approximately, a liter, and a liter of water weighs one kilogram.

APPROXIMATE EQUIVALENTS

A meter (39.37 inches) is about a yard.
A kilogram (2.2 pounds) is about two pounds.
A liter (0.91 dry qt. and 1.06 liquid qts.) is about a quart.
A centimeter (0.39 inch) is about one half inch.
A metric ton (2204.6 pounds) is about a long ton.
A kilometer (0.62 mile, or 3280 feet) is about ⅝ mile.
A cubic centimeter is about a thimbleful.
A nickel weighs about five grams.

For postal purposes fifteen grams are considered the equivalent of one half ounce avoirdupois. At the mint a half dollar is considered to weigh 12.5 grams.

DOMESTIC WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

Long Measure

12 inches	1 foot
3 feet	1 yard
5½ yards	1 rod or pole
40 rods	1 furlong
8 furlongs	1 statute mile (1,760 yards, or 5,280 feet)
3 miles	1 league

Mariners' Measure

6 feet	1 fathom
100 fathoms	1 cable length, or about 1/10 nautical mile
5,280 feet	1 statute mile
6,080.20 feet	1 nautical mile

Surveyors' Measure

1 link	7.92 inches
100 links, or 1 chain	22 yards
10 square chains	1 acre

Square Measure

144 square inches	1 square foot
9 square feet	1 square yard
30¼ square yards	1 square rod
40 square rods	1 rood
4 roods, 160 square rods	1 acre

[An acre contains 43,560 square feet; an area 208′ 8½″ square is approximately one acre.]

640 acres	1 square mile
100 square feet	1 square: used in roofing, etc.

Cubic Measure

1,728 cubic inches	1 cubic foot
27 cubic feet	1 cubic yard
24¾ cubic feet	1 perch

Wood Measure

24¾ cubic feet	1 perch
16 cubic feet	1 cord foot
8 cord feet, or 128 cubic feet	1 cord

[A pile 8 ft. long, 4 ft. wide, and 4 ft. high contains 1 cord.]

Dry Measure

2 pints	1 quart
8 quarts	1 peck
4 pecks	1 bushel
quart, dry measure	67.2 cubic inches
bushel, level	2150.42 cubic inches

Liquid Measure

4 gills	1 pint
2 pints	1 quart
4 quarts	1 gallon
31½ gallons	1 barrel
2 barrels	1 hogshead

[A standard U. S. gallon, the unit of liquid measure, is the same as the English wine gallon, and contains 231 cubic inches. A gallon of water weighs about 8⅓ pounds. A barrel contains about 4⅕ cubic feet.]

Apothecaries' Fluid Measure

60 minims	1 fluid dram
8 fluid drams	1 fluid ounce
16 fluid ounces	1 pint
8 pints	1 gallon

Apothecaries' Weight

20 grains	1 scruple
3 scruples	1 dram
8 drams	1 ounce
12 ounces	1 pound

Avoirdupois Weight

16 drams	1 ounce (437½ grains)
16 ounces	1 pound (7,000 grains)
25 pounds	1 quarter
4 quarters, or 100 pounds	1 short hundredweight
112 pounds	1 long hundredweight
20 hundredweight	1 ton
2,000 pounds (20 short hundredweight)	1 short ton
2,240 pounds (20 long hundredweight)	1 long ton

Troy Weight

24 grains	1 pennyweight
20 pennyweights	1 ounce (480 grains)
12 ounces	1 pound (5,760 grains)
3⅛ grains	1 carat

[The metric carat, 200 milligrams, is now generally used by jewelers.]

Angular Measure

60 seconds (″)	1 minute (′)
60 minutes	1 degree (°)
90 degrees	1 right angle, or quadrant
360 degrees	1 circle, or circumference
1 radian	57.296° –

Time Measure

60 seconds	1 minute
60 minutes	1 hour
24 hours	1 day
7 days	1 week
28 to 31 solar days	1 month
365 solar days	1 common year
366 solar days	1 leap year

[1 tropical, or solar, year = 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 46 seconds; 1 Julian year = 365¼ days.]

FOREIGN MONETARY UNITS

The following list gives the values, in the money of account of the United States, of the monetary units of the countries named, as officially estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury. The value of paper currency in many countries of the world is below par, and fluctuates with political and economic conditions. In actual practice, the commercial values of money of foreign countries are usually below the values listed herewith, and can be found by consulting the quotations on foreign exchange in the daily newspapers. Thus if you order a book from London of which the price is one pound, you can pay for it with a money order or draft costing about five dollars, though the par value of the pound is $8.2397.

Figure given is an approximate exchange rate.—[7] Obligation to sell gold at legal monetary par suspended September 21, 1931.—[8] Currency, national bank notes redeemable on demand in American dollars.—[9] Lempira circulates as equivalent of half of a U. S. dollar.—[10] British money is principal circulating medium.—[11] A decree of August 28, 1936, left the value of the peso to be later defined by law. Value given is current exchange rate.—[12] Convertibility of notes into gold suspended September 26, 1936.—[13] Currency, depreciated Paraguayan paper currency.—[14] Prewar unit was the ruble, then equivalent to about 51 cents. A decree of Octooer 28, 1936, fixed the value of the ruble in foreign exchanges at 4¼ French francs.—[15] British pound sterling also legal tender.—[16] 100 piasters equal to the Turkish pound.

NUMERATION

THE TWO SYSTEMS OF RECKONING THE HIGHER NUMBERS

There are two systems of numeration for numbers of ten digits or more. In one system, used in this country and in France, the billion is a thousand millions, and each higher denomination, as trillion, quadrillion, etc., is a thousand times the one preceding. In the other system, used in Great Britain and most other European countries, the billion is a million millions, and each higher denomination is a million times the one preceding.

NUMERALS	U. S. AND FRANCE	GREAT BRITAIN AND REST OF EUROPE
1,000,000	million	million
1,000,000,000	billion, or (in Europe) milliard	thousand millions, or milliard

PERPETUAL CALENDAR

The table below covers two calendars, the Gregorian, in common use since about 1600, and the Julian. Calling A the century number for any given date, as taken from the table, B the year number, and C the month number, the sum A+B+C is a number representing the date of a Sunday in the given year and month. The dates of other Sundays are equal to this number plus and minus multiples of 7; the dates of other days are readily calculated. Thus if for a given month A+B+C=15, the 15th of that month is a Sunday, and the other Sundays are dated 1, 8, 22, 29; the Mondays are 2, 9, 16, etc.

In columns A, the earlier numbers apply to the Julian calendar only; the additional numbers, given from 1500 on, to the Gregorian. In the column C, the additional numbers for January and February apply to leap years. The year number, B, is found at the intersection of the row opposite the ten with the column under the unit.

EXAMPLE. To find the day of the week of July 4, 1776. A, the century number for 1700, is, in the Gregorian (additional) column, 3. B, the year number for 76 (at the intersection of the 70-row with the 6-column) is 3. C, the month number, is 1. A+B+C=7. The 7th of July, 1776, was thus, by the table, a Sunday; the 4th was therefore a Thursday.

THE JEWISH CALENDAR

The moon was worshiped and revered by many eastern peoples. It had deep significance in the life of the early Hebrews as the basis for determining the times for great religious feasts. The new moon, which was observed by festivals, originally marked the beginning of a new month, although observation has given way to reckoning in the determination of the calendar.

The Jewish year includes twelve months. Twelve lunar months, however, total only 354½ days, twelve days short of the true year, so that an intercalary month is added to the Jewish calendar about every third year, in order that the Passover and other religious festivals shall fall in the proper season of the year. Among the ancient Jews this additional month was added "whenever on the sixteenth of Nisan (April) the barley was not yet ripe." In the modern Jewish calendar, Veadar, or the additional month, is introduced seven times in every nineteen years.

The early method of designating months was by numerical order rather than by name, as "the second month" (Gen. 7 : 11); "the fourth month" (2 Kings 25 : 3); and this practice was generally followed even when the name was given, as "in the month Zif, which is the second month" (1 Kings 6 : 1).

In the Jewish calendar, the year has been reckoned from two different beginnings, the months Tishri (October) and Nisan (April). Before the Babylonian exile the autumn month Tishri, when seedtime in Palestine renewed the agricultural year, was the first month of the year. During the exile, under the influence of the more scientific Babylonian calendar, the new year was observed in the spring month Nisan, at the time of the equinox, and months were distinguished by numerals and changed in name. During this time the memory of the old year was preserved by an ecclesiastical new year observed in the autumn.

From the sixth to the first century, B. C., the year began with Nisan. Then the old year was revived, and the Mishna recognized both years. It named the first of Nisan as the beginning of the sacred year, used for dating the reigns of kings and the times of sacred feasts; and designated the first of Tishri as the beginning of the civil year, used for naming calendar years, Sabbatical years, years of Jubilee, and dates of vegetable and tree planting. The modern Jewish year begins with Tishri.

[1] The year in the Gregorian calendar, or that in use in most Christian countries, is a solar year, divided into twelve arbitrarily fixed parts; whereas the Jewish year is composed of twelve lunar months, or about 354 days. The Jewish year is thus eleven days shorter than the Gregorian year, and about once in three years, or seven times during each nineteen years, a thirteenth, intercalary, month is included in the year. The result of this difference in the method of reckoning time is that no exact equivalent in the Gregorian calendar can be given for months and annual dates in the Jewish calendar, but only approximate equivalents, with the range of variation.

[2] The Jewish day extends from sunset to sunset. The Gregorian equivalent of a given Jewish date is the Gregorian date of the day beginning at midnight following the sunset which begins the specified Jewish date. That is, a Jewish day designated by a Gregorian date begins at sunset of the day before that of the Gregorian date.

[3] The names Ethanim, Bul, Abib, Zif, and Nisan, Sivan, Elul, Chisleu, Tebeth, Sebat, and Adar are mentioned in the Bible; Iyar, Tammuz, Ab, Tishri, and Marchesvan, in the Talmud and other works. The first four are Hebrew; the others are of Babylonian-Assyrian origin and came into use after the Babylonian exile.

[4] The years are designated defective, regular, or perfect, as they contain 353, 354, or 355 days; a leap year includes an intercalary month and may be defective, regular, or perfect.

[5] 29 days, regular or defective; 30 days, perfect.—[6] 30 days, regular and perfect; 29 days, defective.—[7] 30 days in leap year.—[8] This festival is no longer observed.—[9] Originally, the 14th, at the full moon.

[10–19] Variant spellings: [10] Tisri, Tisro; [11] Etanim; [12] Marchesvan; [13] Chislev, Chisleu, Kisleu; [14] Chanukah; [15] Tebeth; [16] Sebat; [17] Adar Sheni; [18] Iyyar; [19] Thammuz.

APPENDIX III

FOREIGN WORDS AND PHRASES

Including Mottoes of States and Nations, Law Terms, Proverbs and Quotations found in English Literature, Colloquial Expressions, etc.

The pronunciation indicated is, except in the case of phrases from the Latin, that of the language from which the phrase is taken. For a discussion of certain points in the pronunciation of foreign words, see page xix. The abbreviation lit. is used for literally.

There are in use two methods of pronouncing Latin: one, the so-called English method, follows in general the principles of English pronunciation; the other, the so-called Roman, or Continental method, follows more or less closely the pronunciation of the ancient Romans themselves. The English pronunciation is still generally used for Latin scientific terms, and for names, phrases, and quotations in English context. All listings in this Appendix are syllabified according to the method of the language from which they are taken; but in the case of Latin words and phrases, the pronunciation is given according to the English method; as, di-ri-go (dĭr′ĭ-gō). A Latin grammar should be consulted for further details as to the Roman pronunciation.

APPENDIX IV

NAMES OF PERSONS AND PLACES

The list of names of persons given in this Appendix embraces historical personages who in the past have attained to lasting distinction, as well as contemporary characters of real interest and importance in all walks of life. The names of Biblical and mythological characters, legendary heroes, and those who for some reason have come to be regarded as personages in literature rather than in history, will in general be found in the main vocabulary, and are therefore not listed here. Among the place names have been included cities and towns in the United States having a population of 10,000 or more according to the census of 1930, and a full selection of other geographical names from all parts of the world, with location, population, area, etc., according to the latest and most authoritative records.
